

Sara F. Hathaway

Sara is an author, social media marketer, and home manager who has earned a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration from the California State University of Sacramento.

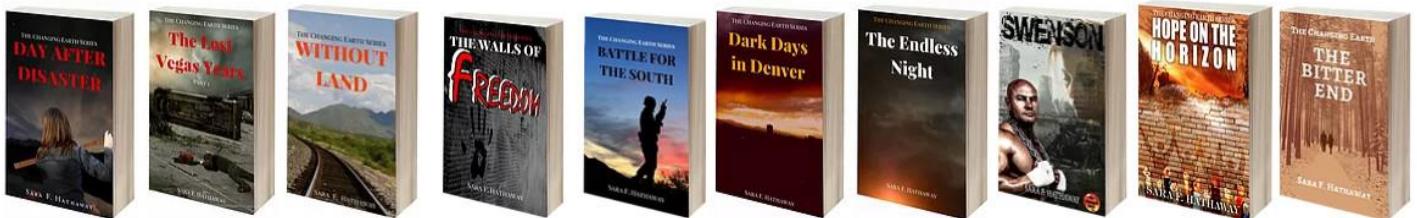

Sara's areas of specialization are in business management and marketing. She is also a survival and homesteading student and practitioner. Sara lives in the piney forest of east Texas. As a happily married woman with two boys, she delights in quality family time hiking and camping. Besides marketing and writing, she participates in martial arts training, tending to her garden, and preserving the fruits of that labor during the week.

The psychology that drives her writings is for people to realize how to prepare for a disaster and appreciate the relationships in their lives. Her writings' central philosophy is that you can be confident in any survival situation if you have the skills and proper mental attitude. She wants people to learn through a fictional experience, just how fragile our manufactured society is.

THE CHANGING EARTH SERIES

The Changing Earth Series is a post-apocalyptic adventure, following Erika Moore, a young woman, wife, and mother, as she navigates a world torn apart by a rapidly changing planet. Her family's survival story starts in California in the book Day After Disaster. Their epic tale continues nine years later, in the book Without Land. The family finds themselves locked up in a FEMA camp because they are no longer landowners. The chaos following the disaster required extreme governmental measures to regain control of the nation, and the refugee population has exploded. The Walls of Freedom describes the Moore family's adventures as they run from the Federal and Mercenary Forces controlling the populous. Unsure of whom to trust, the story Battle for the South tells the tale of the revolution's beginning. In Dark Days in Denver, the earth awakes and adds more complications to the battle for the west. The Endless Night takes readers into the communist central region to display life under federal oppression. Hope on the Horizon continues the story of survival in this new landscape. Finally, The Bitter End brings finality to the adventure as the earth stabilizes, and the people find a new way of life.

Want to explore the facts behind the fiction? The Changing Earth Podcast follows the stories chapter by chapter. Then, we explore a survival concept presented in the chapter reading with survival professionals from across the globe.

Contact:

530 906 6134 Phone
sara@AuthorSaraFHathaway.com Email
AuthorSaraFHathaway.com Website

James Talmage Stevens
aka Doctor Prepper

My recent interview with Sara F.

Hathaway was a rewarding experience—a first-time author, a female author in a genre normally dominated by males, and with an interesting premise.

Sara Hathaway is a young dynamic woman who has not only penned a really good survivalist novel from a woman's point of view, but she is able to weave into her tale lots of tips, pointers, and gut-wrenching personal decisions normally accepted as man-stuff.

MCS Film Review Team

My favorite books are long ones that don't seem long because the pages melt away under the pace of the story and this was definitely one of those. We're seeing a lot of social criticism through literature these days, across all genres, and I think this book definitely contributes to that trend. Movie-wise, this kind of story never goes out of style. I see it as being sort of like the Hunger Games meets the Day After Tomorrow.